Workshop: Anti-social behaviour, securing the public realm and partnership approaches

Wednesday September 22nd, 2010

We would like to invite you to this workshop.

The aim of this new workshop is to enable practitioners and others interested in the area to share learning and good practice from work currently going on in Scotland and to explore challenges that agencies have faced in seeking to address this.

The workshop emerges from work we carried out for Glasgow Housing Association, Strathclyde Police, ACPO CPI and Scottish Government on the impact of Secured By Design on housebreaking crime. Subsequent to this we held two events on our findings and it was clear that much partnership work currently exists across Scotland seeking to address 'incivilities' and other anti-social behaviour in the public realm.

We will be having a number of speakers with a range of expertise (community safety, policing, criminology, landscape architecture), but the emphasis of the day will be to enable participants to share experience, expertise and learning.

The School of the Built and Natural Environment which is hosting this event will be producing material from this event as a set of Practice Notes. If you feel other colleagues or organisations might be interested please pass this on to them. This is a free workshop but as numbers are limited (on a first come first served basis) we would be grateful if you could register your details below.
